TO THE PRESIDENTS AND MEMBERS OF THE SELECT AND COMMON COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF PHILADELPHIA.

GENTLEMEN:

The Board of Directors of the Girard College for Orphans Respectfully asks leave to present its

FIFTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT.

Before giving the usual statement of the present condition of the College, it is deemed important, for a better understanding of the management of its affairs and the policy of its direction, to review concisely its short but interesting history.

The will of Stephen Girard devised to the City of Philadelphia, in trust, two millions of dollars, the income to be devoted "to provide for such number of poor male white orphan children as can be trained in one institution, and obtain a better education as well as a more comfortable maintenance than they usually receive from the application of the public funds."

The College buildings and grounds were transferred to the Directors of the Girard College November 13, 1847, having cost the sum of $1,933,821 78.

The formal dedication of this establishment to its devised use took place January 1, 1848. Thus the life of this charity is numbered but by fifteen years. The distinguished and valued citizens to whom the management of the College was primarily entrusted, construed the intention of the founder of this charity as creating an educational establishment which should vie with those in Europe and America, which were eleemosynary in their character.

The term "College" used by Mr. Girard in his will, as describing his ideal institution, thus gave a direction to the mind of the original management, when organizing it for operation. A nomenclature was adopted peculiar to the conventional interpretation of "college," which colligated the ideal with the practical. The learned and able Professor Alex. Dallas Bache was sent to Europe to examine such institutions as were supposed to represent the one which the will of Mr. Girard directed should be established.

By reference to the elaborate report made by Professor Bache on his return, it can be seen how laboriously he performed the duty assigned him. Notwithstanding the views of those who conscientiously believed a high order of educational institution was designed by the founder, there were others who as seriously disagreed with them. They held it was inconsistent with the purpose of the will, which gathered poor male white orphans for "a more comfortable maintenance" and "a better education" than the public funds furnish, and directed they should be bound as apprentices to learn trades: to invest the institution with so exclusively a college character. This diversity of opinion was natural. The will itself created it. The institution was without precedent. There was no standard anywhere by which to settle or determine the initial question involved. The Girard College went into operation with an honest difference of opinion contravening its aims. These divergent views, if carried out to their conclusions, would on the one hand have terminated in a university ; on the other, an orphan home.

The education and training of youth involve sciential faculty—demand high moral qualities—require essential predispositions. Success is predicated of them in conjunction with capacity, or mental susceptibility of the taught. These are but instrumentalities. Acquirement, in its effects on society indirectly, on individuals directly, is the expression of educational results. To produce these is the purpose of systems ; by them, systems are judged. To define instruction is to portray the consequences of education. Society has no other interest in the means, except as they tend to its real advantage. Society judges of systems by results. Individuals have preferences by reason of preconceived peculiarities from their own experience. The former takes the larger views, bounded by itself. The latter the narrower view, as circumscribed by themselves. Educated minds differ, because systems exist. Each claims for his own that it accomplishes the end society requires. Society has made no final judgment, since no system has yet worked out its premiss. Hence, when Mr. Girard indicated the scope of the education which he called "better" than the public funds furnished, he recognized no special system. He used the term "various branches of a sound education" to designate the results he expected would be attained, first for the pupil and then by society. His will therefore cannot be construed to prescribe an educational system, other than one of a composite order, which was practically to instruct, directly, his immediate beneficiaries, and relatively to add to the sum of practical knowledge which all education gives to society.

It does not appear to have occurred to those who relied on trans-Atlantic investigations, by which to interpret the intentions of the testator, that the difficulty was augmented rather than elucidated. European systems of public education are admirable. Especially those of Prussia and France. But they are admirable only as they are specially adapted to the public want under a form of government which requires and permits education as a governmental policy. The continental systems tend by prescription to this end. But they do more than this. They combine educational benefits, both individual and general, directly with government security and prosperity. Thus, what is termed general education in those States, means a general support of government, primarily as the object, and secondly to benefit individuals the better to accomplish it. It is a national system. Need a comparison be instituted between such a national institution and those various and unsystematized plans which abound here, yet institutional. Again, let it be remarked, that the social, economical, conventional, political and industrial condition of the peoples of Europe and America are wholly dissimilar. It is therefore easily to be perceived how unsatisfactory any effort must be to harmonise the proposed, with the practical results contemplated by Mr. Girard, if the letter and the spirit of his testament are thus to be reconciled. The deduction must be, that experience is the true test of the relations which must be created between the intention of the testator and its practical development.

Still, with these years of experience, we must not trifle. Each annual volume of practical knowledge testifies to the fact, that the benevolent founder of this most liberally endowed institution, did not legislate in his testamentary law for a practical developement of his theoretic charity. If, to support the pupils of the College in luxury, giving them not only a liberal but a collegiate education; exciting and cultivating tastes and habits which are their concomitants, and then, by legal indentures, apprentice them to the trials and deprivations which belong to the novitiate of either trades or handicrafts, was the unyielding purpose of the plan of the testator, experience has hardly sustained it as practicable. But if "a better education" with plain food, clothing, and admitted comforts, or, in the words of the will, a comfortable maintenance which belongs to a home, thus by economy and discretion dispensing the advantages to the largest number of beneficiaries, while for those of decided talents opportunity is afforded to eliminate them, was his aim, then that experience which the history of the College has given, not only approves this latter system of administration, but sanctions it by the force of a construction decreed by utility and success. During the last few years this system has gained on the favorable opinions of the Directors. It is not yet a demonstration. To change every year a portion of the constituents of the Board, is to render any system of administration unstable. It is not, therefore, surprising that as yet no determined and settled policy as between the extremes here noticed was agreed upon, when the record shows that seventy-two gentlemen have, during the fifteen years of the life of the Girard College, been appointed as Directors.

Before proceeding to elucidate by facts the force of the suggestions thus offered, it is proper to remark, that within the past eighteen months a practical effort has been made by the Board to equalize these conflicting views. Its necessity is absolute. A middle course is the solution of difficulties, if not obstacles, which must be obviated or removed, else this College will degenerate into a splendid failure. Such a result will be the consequence of intention without purpose, and action without aim.

On the 1st of January, 1848, the Girard College was formally opened. From that period to January 1st, 1862, there have been admitted nine hundred and seventy-three pupils, or equal to sixty-four and a half each year.

Of these nine hundred and seventy-three, twenty died; and ninety-six were dismissed; and sixty had their indentures cancelled.

See following table:

This shows a total of 176 pupils not educated maintained and apprenticed, as the will of Mr. Girard provides.

The following table shows the number of pupils absconded from the College in the following years. Many absconded two or three times in successive years, and have been counted in each year. Absconding is leaving the institution without permission, and returning voluntarily or otherwise; and this breach of discipline, repeated three times, subjects the pupil to dismissal.

If nine hundred and seventy-three gives the maximum number, nine hundred and seventy-three, less one hundred and seventy-six, or seven hundred and ninety-seven is the minimum number of pupils, from whom those who have been educated to be "apprenticed," must be taken, after deducting the four hundred now in the institution.

During these fifteen years, one hundred and fifty-six pupils have become of age who were apprenticed as required by the will of Mr. Girard.

Of these one hundred and fifty-six apprentices, twenty-three absolutely absconded from their masters, thirteen left their masters owing to various causes, and one hundred and twenty served out with credit their term of apprenticeship. Thus we have one hundred and twenty pupils as the ascertained successful result of fifteen years of experimental effort under this undetermined course of administrative policy ; or, one hundred and twenty pupils educated apprenticed and of age, and thus creditably and successfully prepared by the College for the practical duties of life.

It must be observed that the term successful results of the operations of the College is here used to express the terminated course of its control over these one hundred and twenty pupils. It comprises the term and tuition, which begins on admission of a pupil, and ends with the creditable completion of his apprenticeship and attainment of his legal majority.

If the nine hundred and seventy-three pupils admitted, are to be taken as the basis of this expenditure, then each of these nine hundred and seventy-three has cost $1,108.89 for the time each was in the institution: they came and left at different periods.

The proportion of the annual disbursements for education, to that of the whole annual expenditure, is about one-fifth. Take the year 1861, as an example. The sum expended for the year 1861, by the Department of Instruction was $15,631 56. The whole appropriation was $93,930 00, of which $82,547 49 was expended: thus the average proportion for fourteen years will be say one-fifth of the whole expenditure for the Collegiate Department.

The average number each year under the instruction for say twelve years has been three hundred and twenty-three, and of these an average of say seventy-five pupils have been during this period, receiving their education in the higher or principal department. Five-fourteenths of this instruction is imparted to seventy-three three-hundred and twenty-thirds, or say one-third of the teachers to one-fourth of the pupils. It may be more clearly stated thus, the collegiate character of the institution has been extended to an average of seventy-five out of three hundred and twenty-three pupils.

The views now presented to Councils are the results of the teachings of experience. These lessons could not be taught, till the teacher was prepared to give instruction. This teacher, Experience, is now attempting to perform a duty. Well or ill is to be demonstrated. All that is claimed for the present analysis of the past policy of the College is to give the basis of a correct opinion as to its future. Thereby the Councils of Philadelphia, which are the Trustees of this sui generis endowment, will be in possession of information, long needed and yet unfurnished, by which an intelligent comprehension can be obtained of the highly important and interesting question now under consideration.

It will not be denied, that the experience gained from the observation and practical exemplification of fifteen years administration of the College is authoritative for deductive reasoning to conclusions. It is now sought to ascertain what these conclusions determine. It is conjoined with no other question than that which is essential to translate the will of the founder of the College into practical and beneficial results. This, the will itself requires. It was its 'primum mobile.' It was more. This College, and its greatest capacity for the largest good, were probably the incentives to Girard's accumulation of wealth. Its establishment one of the purposes of his life. Its success, the refrain of his hopes, the burden of his anxiety, and the religion of his longevity.

If then this experience points to any conclusion, it is the propriety and legality under the will, of reconciling the extreme interpretations which its text may suggest. This appears to be the opinions of those who have within the past two years directed the policy of the College. It is at least patent that no inhibition is found in the language or the intention of the testator to this course. The propriety is 'perspicuous, because it enlarges the capacity of the institution, and increases the number of its beneficiaries, subjecting the greatest number to the influences of the institution, and thereby relatively benefiting community while it directly benefits individuals. This the will prescribes.

Let us offer another view by which this propriety is to be tested:

In the year	The average number of pupils was	Sum appropriated.	Sum expended.
1851,	300,	$62,900 00	$61,794 14
1852,	295,	61,250 00	60,512 37
1853,	295,	63,800 00	63,309 76
1854,	300,	73,225 00	71,402 37
1855,	300,	83,330 00	81,754 84
1856,	305,	85,380 00	82,963 33
1857,	295,	92,340 00	88,173 42
1858,	350,	87,280 00	81,949 38
1859,	325,	88,430 00	85,762 25
1860,	340,	87,080 00	80,943 53
1861,	375,	93,930 00	81,547 49
1862,	400,	77,375 00	*73,247 72

These figures present several subjects for consideration. First, The efforts made economically to disburse the annual appropriation, by the Directors, since the institution went into operation.

Secondly, That the means yearly devoted to the College were sufficient to have increased the number of pupils.

Thirdly, That for want of a settled and

*NOTE.—$4,127 28 was unexpended, and on 31st December, 1862, and there was on hand food and clothing to the value of say $4,000.

determined policy of administration there is great disparity between the expenses and the yearly average of pupils. It will be seen that during the past year the average number of pupils was four hundred, while the expenditure was but $73,247 72; while in the years 1852, '53 and '57, when the average number was but two hundred and ninety-five, the expenditures were severally $60,512 37; $63,309 76; $88,173 42; and in the year 1861, when the number of pupils was three hundred and seventy-five, the expenditure was $81,547 49.

To educate and support three hundred and sixty pupils, during the year 1860, the whole number of persons under salaries in the College was eighty-seven, at a cost of $29,031.31.

The amount of unexpended balances which reverted to the fund of the Girard Estate since 1848 is over $50,000 appropriated but not expended. This sum would have educated a larger number than the average, it being equal to at least $3,500 each year.

On an average of two hundred and ninety-five pupils in the years 1852, '53 '57, the per annum per capita was for the year 1852, $205 46; for 1853, $214 60; for 1857, $298 89. During the year 1862, with the average number of pupils at four hundred, the per annum per capita was only $123 12.

Directing attention singly to the conclusions which are here attempted to be deduced, though not claimed to be oracular, it will not be unwarrantable to assume that the former policy of the administration of the College, has not realised results which were attainable. As an institution of learning, having a University character to establish, it has not been successful. As an "orphan establishment," with the distinctive features of an educational institution, it has failed of its largest usefulness. This want of success is attributable to the fact, that the concurrence of all its means to this object was impossible of reconciliation. So from their character, so by reason of divergence of the theory and practice which the will permits to exist. Thus, so, necessarily. The failure of largest usefulness has resulted because of the conflict of opinion as to what the College ought to be.

After an investigation sufficiently severe to determine the general fact, that the expenditure was in excess of the necessity for the proper, healthful and reasonable maintenance of the limited number of pupils then in the College, the Board, by a Special Committee, carefully examined the subject, and on its report, introduced for the first time a system of economy into the domestic administration, which has produced the most gratifying results.

Notwithstanding the experience which a long connection with the institution was supposed to have given; considering that monthly reports are made to the Board on all subjects connected with the interests of the College; induced to believe that great intelligence and peculiar fitness were the characteristics of the management of important departments of the establishment, yet the Board of Directors was left to its own resources to ascertain how this reform in the administration was to be made. After a patient important labor, the system was at last put into operation. Even then it demanded the most decided determination of the Board to have it administered. The experience of the past year has fully justified this action of the Board. It has done more, it has proved beyond cavil or controversy, that there existed a stern necessity for the economical reform which has been so successfully secured. During the year 1862, there has been an average of over four hundred pupils in the College, and the cost of their education and maintenance has been but 73,247 72. The appropriation for the year was $77,375 00. Out of this sum $4,127 28 was unexpended, and the stock on hand of food and clothing is about $4000. Let it be remembered that during this year, a large increase in the prices of food and clothing has taken place. Contrast this result with the figures for the three previous years. In the year 1859, with an average of three hundred and twenty-five pupils, $85,762 35 was expended, out of $88,430 00 appropriated. In the year 1860, with an average of three hundred and forty pupils, $80,943 53 was expended, out of $87,080 00 appropriated. In the year 1861, with an average of three hundred and seventy-five pupils, $81,547 49 was expended, out of $93,930 00 appropriated. In the year 1862, with an average of four hundred pupils, $73,247 72 was expended, $77,375 00 appropriated. For the year 1863, with an expected average of over five hundred pupils, Councils have appropriated $84,415 00.

Against these facts it will require more forcible arguments by which to attempt to counteract this action of the Board, than those which have demonstrated failure.

The initial question already noticed is about being solved. As a collegiate institution, theoretically it was not difficult to foresee its course. Practically that course has not reached its antecedent predictions. The ideal and the real came into conflict. The subjective theory was estopped by the objective fact. The idiosyncracies of each would not co-relate. This is not to be imputed as either criticism or censure, to our predecessors in the directory. Certainly not, it was caused from conflict self-created, the natural consequence of a convolution of eccentric policies. Theories to be solved by experience, simply this and nothing more.

The will of Mr. Girard shows that its prominent, if not its most important, idea, was the foundation of this College. He devotes to its erection and equipment first the sum of two millions of dollars. The reason for this bequest is in his own words :—“ And “ whereas I have been for a long time im“ pressed with the importance of educating “ the poor, and of placing them, by the early “ cultivation of their minds, and the devel“ opment of their moral principles above the “ many temptations which through poverty

“ and ignorance they are exposed, and I am “ particularly desirous to provide for such a “ number of poor male white orphan children
“ as can be trained in one institution, a better “ education, as well as a more comfortable “ maintenance than they usually receive from “ the application of the public funds,” therefore the devise of the two millions of dollars for the completion and equipment of a “permanent College.”

The purpose of this College is to train in one institution at least three hundred pupils, and give them “a better education,” and a “more comfortable maintenance” than they usually receive from the public funds.

The standard of “education” and “maintenance” which the public funds established was that of thirty years ago. The will was dated February 16, 1830, the last codicil and republication was dated June 20, 1831.

To indicate the clear purpose of extending the usefulness of this "institution," or "College," or "orphan establishment," to the greatest number of pupils, the will further and subsequently provides as follows: "If
" the income arising from that part of the " said sum of two millions of dollars remain" ing after the construction and furnishing of " the College and out buildings, shall, owing " to the increase of the number of orphans
" applying for admission, or other cause, be " inadequate to the construction of new build" ings or the maintenance and education of
" as many orphans as may apply for admis" sion, then such further sum as may be " necessary for the construction of new build" ings, and the maintenance and education of " such further number of orphans as can " be maintained and instructed within such " buildings as the said square of ground shall " be adequate to, shall be taken from the " final residuary fund hereinafter expressly
" referred to for the purpose, comprehending
" the income of my real estate in the City

“and County of Philadelphia, and the dividend of my stock in the Schuylkill Navigation Company—my design and desire being that the benefits of said institution shall be extended to as great a number of orphans as the limits of the said square and buildings therein can accommodate.”

The square of ground here mentioned, situated between Chestnut and Market, and 11th and 12th streets, was devoted to other purposes by the will, and forty-five acres of ground substituted, by the codicil of 20th of June, 1831. In this codicil he designates the “College” and “institution” by an equivalent term of “orphan establishment.”

Surely there can be no difficulty in comprehending both the “design” and “desire” of such testamentary language. “As great a number of orphans;” “owing to the increase of the number of orphans applying for admission,” “as many orphans as may apply for admission;” are words which have but one signification. It means that every reasonable effort must be made to admit those applying, and the funds necessary “shall be taken from the final residuary fund" designated for this purpose.

The education these pupils are to receive is prescribed, viz.: "The various branches of a sound education," which Mr. Girard enumerates thus: reading, writing, grammar, arithmetic, geography, navigation, surveying, practical mathematics, astronomy, natural, chemical, experimental philosophy, French and Spanish languages, and such other learning and science as the capacities of the several scholars may merit or warrant"—and he sums up the schedule of subjects to be taught, and fixes the character of the capacity to receive instruction by these words, "I would have them taught facts and things rather than words or signs." The education was to be a practical education, the instruction was to be a practical instruction, the average capacity of the scholars was to be high enough for this, and the intention of the testator was fulfilled.

The test, the standard, were both to be practical, for he further expresses his desire that the pupils, "by every proper means shall have formed and fostered in their minds," "a pure attachment to our republican institutions, and to the sacred rights of conscience as guaranteed by our happy constitution." Nothing more practical could be desired, nothing less practical could accomplish his purpose. This "orphan establishment," in the language of the codicil referred to, was to be an institution or College where practical benefits were to be the residuum of the education imparted, and the "comfortable maintenance" afforded.

To these plain provisions of the will the Board of Directors are now yielding obedience.

At a meeting of the Board held December 10, 1862, the following preamble was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That in the opinion of this Board, Girard College was not intended to be solely an institution for the mental instruction of youth, but one which will give to its inmates "a better education than they usually receive by an application of the public funds," one that will fit them to become good, useful, and practical men, and train them for agricultural, mechanical, and such other pursuits as may be suitable to their individual capacities.

Efficient efforts are now being made for a continued reduction in the expenditures as has been already fully shown in this report.

The College, out-buildings, and grounds, which comprise what is called "Girard College," are monuments of munificent liberality, unrestricted expenditure, and the influence of a cultivated æsthetics. Placing youth amid such surroundings, where the mind is to be educated and the morals trained, is subjecting it to the necessity of careful circumspection, lest habits, tastes, and expectations are either imperceptibly created, or unintentionally fostered, which may not tend to reconcile adult with adolescent life.

Experience indicates this is to be guarded against, by well devised counteraction. To so mentally and morally educate a pupil, as to unfit him for the business which it is enjoined he must be apprenticed to acquire, is unwise. To train the youth to be useful citizens, is the present purpose of the Directors. It is the plain purpose of the will. It is worthy of the respect of intelligent and conscientious minds. It should be sanctioned by official earnest co-operation. This purpose is but giving a "better education," and a more comfortable maintenance" to as "many orphans as may apply for admission" for the benefits of this "College," "institution," or "orphan establishment." To carry out this purpose requires no radical change in the present system in operation in the College. On the contrary. This system needs only to be so modified as to increase the number of pupils. To absorb every dollar which by right belongs to the objects of this trust, is the only requirement which may be regarded as a novelty. To devote the "College, out-buildings, and grounds" for the purposes of the maintenance and education of as many orphans as may apply for admission; and so economically disburse the funds appropriated, as to meet this demand, is the present policy, desire and design of the Board. That such a modification should attract attention is not surprising.

It remains now for the trustees of the fund, the councils of Philadelphia, to aid in this work of increasing the number of pupils in the College. Can it be accomplished. Let us unitedly make the effort. Let it be undertaken with the only motive which should animate those on whom so serious a responsibility is imposed. Act as we may we can not escape it.

The gross income of the Girard Estate since the opening of the College, and the fund expended in the same period for repairs to buildings, the support and education of the pupils, and the average number, are here given:

Income.	Average number of Pupils.	Sum Expended.
1848, $158,992 58,	300,	$55,054 46

1862, 131,552 74,	400,	73,247 72

From this gross income is to be deducted the costs, charges and appropriations for other objects, as required by the will.

Taking the year 1860 with the assumed number of pupils to have been; say three hundred and sixty, the cost of education and support per capita is itemized as follows:

Furniture,	$ 2.83	each pupil.

$225.12 was the cost for each pupil for that year.

The Board reduced the gross expenditures in November, 1861, estimated $12,694.00.

The per capita cost for the year 1862, the average number of pupils being 400, has been reduced to about $123.12, which is a saving per capita of, say $75.77 each pupil over the year 1857, counting stock on hand.

It is not for the Board of Directors to do more than express the hope, that the largest proportion of the fund, which the will sets apart for the College, may be appropriated for the admission of as many orphans as may apply. This hope is expressed under the belief, that the suggestions already made may be found worthy of the consideration of the City Councils. Thus, the Board of Directors leave the subject. To give these facts, in support or explanation or justification of the present policy of the Board is demanded by a conviction of its propriety. The effect to be produced by them is not with us. If they are found to be partial, or are subjected to criticism, or can be negatived by argument from like premises, good will follow the agitation of the subject thus induced.

On February 12th, 1862, date of last catalogue, there were four hundred pupils in the College. From that date to the thirty-first day of December, 1862, there were fifty-nine pupils admitted; making the whole number for the last year four hundred and fifty-nine.

Thirty-eight pupils have been apprenticed during 1862. There are now on trial, previous to being apprenticed, eighteen pupils.

Ten pupils have been dismissed from the College since January, 1, 1862, indentures of three cancelled, and none have died, leaving on the thirty-first of December, ult., four hundred and eight pupils in the College.

During the past year, and once in the year 1861, every applicant for admission from the 'old city,' within the pre-requisites of the will, was received into the College. The list of these applicants was thus exhausted. These are the first instances, since the completion of the complement at the organization, or during the past twelve years, when so desirable a result has been accomplished. This fact is here stated as evidence of the earnest effort of the Board to fulfil the "design" and "desire" of Mr. Girard, to diffuse the benefits of the institution to the greatest number of his designated beneficiaries. It should animate the Councils of Philadelphia with a feeling of confidence, that the present direction neither seeks nor sanctions any means to impair the character, destroy the system, or impinge the usefulness of this orphan establishment.

In the ranks of the federal army there have been found, and now are, many former pupils of this College. One of these young heroes lies buried within the enclosure of the College cemetery.

The number of applications for admission has been augmented by orphanage occasioned from the deaths of our citizens since our national strife sought a solution in war. As orphanage is one of the consequences attendant on battles, then earnest efforts should be made to give to such orphan-made youth an early participation in the benefits of the College. This class is increasing. Its cause growth is existing. Our duty is to meet the requirements thus created.

The number of applicants on the list for admission on the thirty-first of December, ult., is one hundred and forty-one. This number has accumulated for over two years.

On October 21, 1862, all the 'old city' boys were admitted, in addition to sixteen from the county of Philadelphia and State of Pennsylvania.

During the year 1862 most gratifying information has been received from graduates, who are doing well, and appear not only satisfied, but are zealously devoting themselves to their business apprenticeship. It cheers us in our labors, nerves us to action, rewards our anxieties with a solace and sustains our faith in the ultimate good which may yet be largely accomplished by this College.

On the last day of the year 1862, Wm. H. Allen, LL.D., voluntarily terminated his presidency of the Institution. President Allen has been fourteen years engaged in his official relations to the College. The most appropriate testimony to be given on his retirement, will be found in the action of the Board at its meeting, held December, 1862. It is thus recorded :

The Board of Directors of Girard College having received and accepted the resignation of Wm. H. Allen, LL. D., as President of this College, desire to testify their appreciation of his high character, integrity and scholastic attainments.

Resolved, That this Board bears testimony to his high moral worth as a gentleman, and his distinguished abilities as a teacher and scholar.

Resolved, That during a period of thirteen years, whilst Professor Allen has filled the important position of President of this College, his intercourse with the members of this Board was characterized by uniform courtesy and kindness of manner.

Resolved, That this board hereby acknowledges the valuable services rendered by Prof. Allen to the interests and success of this College, and in parting with him they desire to express their heartfelt wishes for his future success and usefulness.

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Board is directed to transmit to Professor Allen, a copy of these resolutions properly engrossed.

After the most careful examination, with a single purpose of fitly filling this most important post, the Board desires to elect a gentleman as President of the Girard College, who can bring to the position the highest character, admitted qualifications, energy, activity, administrative ability, moral and intellectual capacities, zeal and worth. He should be imbued with a spirit of earnest devotion to the well-defined moral and educational interests of the institution, and it is believed, with the cordial support he will receive from the Board, he may be enabled to develop the latent capacities of the College for its greatest benefits and diffuse advantages to the largest number of pupils.

A change in the office of Matron was deemed proper, in order that the Board might introduce at the same time increased vigor and economy in the domestic administration of the establishment. It was found by experience that the incumbent of such a position should seek after and suggest, and practically introduce efforts to this end. Without any comparison of qualifications or now needed explanation, Miss Anne Robinson was elected matron. The Board hopes to find realized all its anticipations from this change in the head of the household.

The purpose of the Board is to give to those charged with the government of the administrative departments of the College, full and sufficient power to perform their respective duties, and exact rigid accountability from them. The responsibility of those who are thus charged being fixed; and authority vested in them for all the purposes of their positions, will it is believed healthily invigorate the functional action of these departments. The Board will be exempt from the double task, formerly either imposed or acquired, of legislation and administration. The consequent anomaly of making laws and governing, by administering them, will be obviated. Thus the Directors will be occupied by supervising the operations of the departments, and the Board required to correct defects by enacting particular rules for their government. An harmonious co-operation of all official action will be secured, and the proper responsibility of each definitively and directly ascertained.

It may be here stated that there is now inserted in the indentures to the city, by which pupils are legally in the College, a clause, enabling the Directors to return to his friends a pupil who, from either physical or mental cause, is incapable of receiving the full benefits of the College.

It has been found from careful investigation, that a number of pupils admitted yearly, as they advance in age, show a lack of that mental ability, necessary for acquiring instruction in the highest branches of the College course. To detain them in a class, the average acquirements of which they cannot attain or hold, is impeding the progress of the capable, without improving the incapable. The incompetent clog the competent. They do more, they occupy places for which there are creditable competitors. The College has exhausted its power of improving the mind by efforts at instruction in subjects or sciences which they are unable further to receive. Some of these scholars are too young to apprentice to trades. For others it is not easy to find places where they can be taught mechanical or other business.

To remedy this evil, it is proposed that these pupils be kept up to the average they acquire in education, and place them under suitable instructors to obtain a familiarity with handicraft manipulations. The knowledge of the use of tools is thus secured, which gives them great advantages when they begin their apprentice life. A boy with such knowledge is more readily apprenticed than one educated in "words and signs" and not "facts and things." In this connection, and most properly here, it is well to remark, that the demand for places is greater than the demand for apprentices. To retain in the College, boys who are ready to be taught mechanical or other business, who have finished the College course, whose age is quite or nearly up to the maximum time mentioned in the will of Mr. Girard: scholars out of school, and, it may be, idle: is of very doubtful propriety. They who have received all the benefits of the institution thus occupy the places of candidates who cannot be admitted. This is an injustice to both. For these reasons it was deemed advisable to give both these classes of inmates an opportunity to learn useful knowledge in handicraft labor. So soon as the system can be fairly put into operation and its effects ascertained, it will be the subject of a full report to your honorable body. To show how far industrial instruction has progressed and its effects, a condensed statement from the reports of their teachers is given. The gardener has on average eight boys in his class; their labor is equal to, if paid for, about $500 a year. Instructed in this useful branch of agriculture they are made valuable to those who may select them as farmers. In the shoemaking class there is an average of four boys daily engaged. They learn in this branch of labor the use of tools, and habits of careful attention to their work.

The work performed by them is equal to about $500 for the year.

The average of pupils employed by the carpenter is yet but one per day. The advantage of instruction in this branch needs no comment. To acquire any knowledge in it is desirable.

The effect of this instruction has been to render the pupils more willing to be apprenticed to trade—branches of industry. It modifies the change from life in the institution to that in their future association in the business world. It prepares them for their new relations on leaving the institution. As an experiment it has been successful, not only on those within its immediate influences, but also on the pupils generally. Thus far it has worked well. It is worthy of an impartial and full trial. If it is a success, then it will be of vast advantage to the pupils and the institution, and the community. This College could accomplish no greater good than causing an increased respect for honest labor, and aiding in dignifying it as it deserves. We have yet to see, here it may be remarked, what will be the fate of a free people among whom industry is the unstable result of an existing demand, and even this labor, a reproach on the trade—taught. Knowledge should ennoble all who possess it. Ignorance is now less a misfortune, than a crime.

The Board of Directors has thus frankly presented a sketch of the past and present condition of the College, to the City Government. The facts are given with full faith in their correctness. The deductions made are those which follow as a consequence. The propriety of this collocation needs no support. Justice to the great interests involved; the system now inaugurated to secure it; the ability of those of our predecessors who with different opinions labored so assiduously to maintain them; to the teachings of experience; to the unanimity and earnest devotion of those now seeking to accomplish the modifications essential to make Girard College a successful experiment; justice to all and each of these unbiassed and disinterested incentives, is satisfied with, if it does not sanction, this view presented.

It is necessary, when considering the administration of this institution, to understand, that it has no counterpart in this country, if in Europe. It is its own precedent. Before, never, has a like establishment been put into operation. It is also necessary to understand that our communital, social, condition as it existed and was developed in its industrial relations, when the plan of this College was adopted by Mr. Girard, and elaborated in his will, has greatly changed during the last quarter of a century. If this social condition has made progress, what has become obsolete cannot be reintroduced by our efforts. We must treat social or industrial conditions as we find them. We must adapt the administration of the College to necessities. It is useless effort to attempt to control or modify them.

Hence it is, that orphan-youth, collected in one institution; there to be educated mentally, morally, physically; trained in the teaching of home influence; to be impressed with christian truths; and then placed under the care of individuals who are to instruct them in a trade or business beyond the direct custody of the College, until the youth become of age, must be prepared by its educational system for the realities of our social condition, and life's trials. To do this, is the duty of the administration of the College. To do this effectually, is the task of the direction of the College unaided by the light of experience from any like anterior effort. The apprentice-fact, in the requirement of legal transition from College, to trade-life, cannot be avoided, and is an increasing obstacle in our future. To render this administration successful, with the difficulties which attend it, demands, that the directing authority should be permitted uninterruptedly to attempt its practical solution in success.

The usual statistical information is herewith transmitted, together with a catalogue of the present and former orphan pupils of the institution.

In conclusion, the Board impressed with those great mercies which have been vouchsafed to our inmates during the past year, invoke for the future of the College, that Wisdom which will so direct its management, as to secure the aims proposed, make it a benefit to society, and a blessing to those who have been subjected to its influences.

Respectfully submitted.

RICHARD VAUX,

President of the Board of Directors.
